• On this screen, you will find a lot of information. If you click the underlined terms, additional information will be provided.

EXAMPLES

- o If you click the title of the class 'Human Origins', a brief summary and description of the class and all classes in Anthropology is provided.
- o If you click 'Prerequisites', a list of classes will be provided which is important before selecting this class, as this knowledge is required prior to taking the course.
- o If you click 'Resources', a list of the required reading materials is provided.
- o If you click 'Evaluations' a summary of the evaluations of the professors classroom performance is provided.

TIPS:

- 1) Although you should use the above method to complete your Course List Forms, you may also check the individual department's website for your personal reference. Each department updates their proposed courses for the upcoming quarters much earlier than they are scheduled on Tritonlink. This will help you plan more effectively.
- 2) It is good practice to search for specific course enrollment numbers over the past 3 years. This will show enrollment patterns and give you a better idea of the likelihood that there will be available seats in a certain course. For example, if you are interested in Psychology 105 for Fall 2017, you can view the enrollment numbers for the last 3 years on Tritonlink to give you a better idea of typical enrollment numbers. In this case, Psychology 105 seems to have many open seats available every year and although there is no guarantee, it is likely that there will also be available seats in Fall 2017.
